“Truck drivers are in one of the unhealthiest and deadliest jobs in the country”

Article taken from the Sydney Morning Herald 21 August 2018

A case for change

A recent study in 2016 at UTS of truck and train drivers in Australia found as many as 13% of heavy truck drivers in Australia could have depression.

The common workplace conditions for drivers imply that they can be viewed as a “depression vulnerable population”

- Long hours spent sitting
- Workplace isolation
- Monotonous driving conditions
- Pressure to meet delivery schedules
- Need for continual alertness
